VALVOLE EGR

Le valvole EGR (Exhaust Gas Recirculation - Ricircolo gas combusti) servono a rimettere in circolo una "piccola" parte dei gas di scarico mettendo in comunicazione collettore di scarico e collettore di aspirazione del motore a combustione interna.

Questa operazione ha un unico scopo, diluire la miscela di aria e idrocarburi in entrata e conseguentemente abbassare il picco della temperatura raggiunta dai gas. Con ciò si ottiene un notevole abbattimento delle emissioni di NOx, ossidi di Azoto vale a dire gas ad effetto serra 296 volte superiore all'anidride carbonica.

Le valvole EGR inizialmente utilizzate nei motori a gasolio (ciclo Diesel), sono oggi installate anche sui motori benzina (ciclo Otto). L'inseverimento delle Normative Comunitarie ha determinato un sempre più diffuso utilizzo delle stesse unitamente al loro affinamento ed alla diversa tipologia di comando, pneumatico ed elettrico. La centralina motore gestisce la valvola pneumatica tramite il convertitore di pressione, mentre gestisce direttamente quella a comando elettrico. Le valvole di nuova generazione prevedono il raffreddamento dei gas e permettono di soddisfare le esigenze della normativa euro 5.

È importante dire che l'operazione di ricircolo gas di scarico riduce la percentuale di gas fresco in aspirazione (ossigeno) e conseguentemente diminuisce in maniera sensibile la potenza erogata dal motore; per questo motivo il funzionamento della valvola viene regolato costantemente dalla centralina elettronica di gestione accensione/iniezione. Eventuali disfunzioni della valvola (bloccaggio in posizione aperta) possono determinare irregolarità di funzionamento al regime minimo con spegnimenti improvvisi, difficoltà di avviamento, minori prestazioni, elevata fumosità e consumo carburante. La scelta di un prodotto di alta qualità garantisce sempre e comunque le migliori prestazioni del motore sommate al maggior rispetto dell'ambiente.

EGR VALVES

EGR Valves (Exhaust Gas Recirculation) are used to send back into circulation a small portion of exhaust gas by linking the exhaust pipe with the intake manifold of the internal combustion engine.

The only purpose of this process is to dilute the mixture of fresh air and incoming hydrocarbons, in order to reduce the temperature reached by gas. As a consequence, emission of NOx (nitric oxygen, gas with a greenhouse effect 296 times stronger than carbon oxide) decrease impressively.

Initially, EGR valves were employed only in Diesel engines; nowadays they are installed also on petrol engines. Since community regulations have become even more strict, their use has spread and their quality is improved together with their different kind of control: pneumatic and electrical. While electrovalves are directly controlled by the Engine Control Unit, pneumatic valves are managed through the pressure converter. New generation valves encompass an exhaust gas cooling system, that allows the vehicle to fall within EURO 5 parameters.

It is worth noting that the exhaust gas recirculation process reduces the percentage of oxygen at intake, considerably affecting the power of the engine; for this reason the valve working is constantly regulated by the ECU.

Failures of the EGR valve (blockage in open position) might result in rough idle, sudden power off, reduced overall performances, increased exhaust emissions and fuel consumption. An high quality product makes sure of the best performances of the engine together with an higher respect for the environment.
